The Power of Forgiveness

"Forgiveness is not easy for anyone, and we all live in situations in which we have to forgive or be forgiven. Some years ago I read the book "Left to tell: Discovering God Amidst the Rwandan Holocaust", from Immaculée Ilibagiza. She recently sat down with Franciscan University President Father Dave Pivonka, TOR '89, and recorded a powerful conversation on "Finding Freedom Through Forgiveness" for Faith and Reason's In Focus series."

"Where were you when the Rwandan genocide started in 1994? I was a student in college, and I happened to be home for the Easter holiday. That's when the president of the country was killed. The week before, I remember somebody asking me what I thought was going to happen. I said it felt almost like rain was in the air, just about to fall. Anytime I prayed, I felt like something terrible was happening. In Rwanda, the hatred between the Tutsi tribe and the Hutu tribe was really being pushed by the leaders of the country. What is the deeper, spiritual root of division between people? The devil is horrible. It's never about race. It's never about tribe. It's never about the color of your hair or even where you come from. It's just the evil that we accept into our hearts. Whatever it is, when we embrace hate, then we have to find somebody to become the target. Where did you go when the genocide against the Tutsis began? My father had the rosary in his hand. He told everybody not to be scared. He even told them, "If this is it and we're going to die, so what? We're going to heaven. This is our chance to repent our sins." Everyone was quiet and repenting in their hearts. He gave me a rosary and asked me to go to our neighbor, who was from the other tribe but who was a man he trusted. So, I went to the neighbor with only the rosary, against my will and out of respect for my parents. This man put me in a three-by-four foot bathroom with seven other women, where we hid for three months. During this time in the bathroom, I saw myself in ways I never had before.

How did you wrestle with forgiveness while being persecuted? While hiding in the bathroom, I would pray the Rosary all day. When I was praying, I started to skip the part of the Our Father where you say to forgive us our trespasses as we forgive others. God sees everything, and you can't lie to somebody who sees the inside. I told him, "You want this, but I don't know if I can. My situation is different. I hope you're OK with that. You know my anger, and I'm justified." God is so patient. I kept praying and, after a time, I felt someone was saying, "Remember, those Jesus' words. How can we forgive people who hurt us? I would tell someone who is trying to forgive that it's not just worldly. Go into Scripture, and go to God. Many times, it does not make sense. Go into the Scripture with faith and belief. Then, if you don't understand something, ask God to help you. Also, start praying for your enemies. Many times, people think if they're praying for their enemies then they're praying for them to have a nice car or to do well in school. But when you pray for your enemies, you pray for them to change. You pray, of course, for their blessings if God wants to give them".

Question: Am I aware that I need God's help to forgive any offense received, or to ask for forgiveness for the harm I have caused to others?

Adventures in Ordinary Love

"The daily responsibilities of married life can strengthen the bonds of friendship between spouses"

In the article "Adventures in Ordinary Love," the author, Jared Zimmerer explains that a strong and lasting marriage is not built on constant excitement or big romantic experiences, but on the small, everyday actions that show love and commitment. He explains that married couples can become busy and distant because of work, children, chores, and other responsibilities, but these ordinary moments can actually bring spouses closer together.

Simple things like listening to each other, forgiving, praying together, helping with chores, and spending time together are ways to strengthen a marriage. Zimmerer's main point is that true love is shown through repeated acts of kindness, patience, sacrifice, loyalty, and forgiveness. He believes that the ordinary parts of marriage are not boring or unimportant; instead, they are where genuine and lasting love is created.
