Why Me?

"When I was 16, a famous hypnotist came to my city. I had seen him on other occasions in past years and I really enjoyed his show. I wanted him to hypnotize me, too. Before the show started, the hypnotist told us that only certain people with a certain mental state could be hypnotized. Then, he told the audience—there were about 800 people—to do a simple hand exercise, and at the end of this exercise, those with their hands interlocked could go up on stage, because they were the ones who could be hypnotized. I was with a group of friends in one of the first rows of the theater. None of their hands had remained interlocked. Mine had not either but I pretended as if they were stuck together. All of my friends started shouting, "Go up on stage, Clare! He's going to hypnotize you!" I went up along with about 30 other people. We got in a row facing the public. The hypnotist came up to each one of us and touched our foreheads with the palm of his hand, saying in a deep voice, "Relax!" I saw how some of them fell into the chair that had been placed behind them, in anticipation of this reaction. The hypnotist sent those who didn't fall back to their places, while the audience gave them a compassionate applause, seeing how they would not be hypnotized. Then it was my turn. He did exactly the same thing to me and I "fell" into the chair behind me. "I'm completely conscious," I thought. "I don't feel hypnotized." And the truth was, I was not hypnotized. On the count of three, the hypnotizer told us to open our eyes but that we would still be under the effect of I do not remember what. With his back turned to the audience, he winked at us saying, "So, you know what you have to do." None of us there on stage had been hypnotized. Either they were all actors or they were people like myself, willing to play along with the show of this "legendary hypnotist."

I tell this story because when I realized that God was calling me to religious life, nobody could believe that God would call a girl like me. For many, it was impossible that I could have a vocation. Chesterton once said, "When men choose not to believe in God, they then become capable of believing in anything." What an amazing quote! And what a sad truth! God can call whomever He wants, whenever He wants, wherever He wants... Why? Because He is God. Our Founder wrote a poem entitled, "Why me?" that says, "I will no longer ask 'Why me?' I will simply recognize Your freedom and give You thanks unceasingly." The truth is that I never thought of becoming a nun. I thought of becoming a hundred other things... but never a nun! I received the sacraments of Baptism, Confession, Communion, and Confirmation, but I never understood—and I never really made an effort to understand—what I was receiving. Sadly, from the time I was young—about 12 or 13 years old—I started going to parties and clubs and put myself in a really bad, worldly environment. I smoked and drank. Alcohol began to be a problem for me and I was incapable of living without a pack of cigarettes" www.sisterclare.com)

Question: Have you experienced God's calling in your life in any way?

Little Marriage Helpers

"Far from being a hindrance, children offer spouses unexpected ways to deepen their love."

In the article "Little Marriage Helpers," Philip Kosloski discusses how children can have a positive and meaningful impact on a husband and wife's marriage. He explains that although many couples may worry that having children will make marriage more difficult or take away from their relationship, children can actually bring spouses closer together. Raising children gives couples shared responsibilities and experiences that can create a stronger bond between them. The author shares his own experience of becoming a father and explains that caring for young children can be exhausting because babies and toddlers require so much time, attention, and energy. However, he believes that the challenges of parenting can also teach couples to work together and appreciate one another more.

Kosloski also emphasizes that couples should make their marriage a priority even while raising children. He explains that it is important for spouses to intentionally set aside time for each other, whether that means spending quiet time together or going on regular date nights. Taking time away from the children allows couples to reconnect and remember that their relationship is the foundation of their family. The author also reflects on how his love for his wife has grown throughout their marriage and how their children have become an important part of that growth.

Overall, the article's message is that children are not simply an added responsibility to a marriage; they can be a blessing that helps spouses grow in love, patience, teamwork, and commitment while building a stronger family together.
