What are your fruits?

Antonia Brenner was twice divorced and had raised seven children when she gave up her comfortable life in Southern California to live in a small prison cell in the border city of Tijuana. The one time Beverly Hills resident became a nun at age 50, and for more than three decades devoted her life to serving not only those behind bars, but also others on the outside who were poor, sick and vulnerable. "She cared and loved so much," said Sr. Viola Lovato Ramirez, general leader of the Eudist Servants of the 11th Hour. Mother Antonia founded the religious community for older women like herself who felt the call to serve. "She loved the people of Mexico especially, God put that in her heart," said Sr. Viola Lovato Ramirez. Antonia was named "The French Saint" after St. John Eudes. The Eudist sisters were formally accepted as a private association of the faithful in 2003 by Tijuana's bishop. The community currently consists of 11 sisters who range in age from 56 to 85, five of them assigned to Tijuana. The rest are based in different parts of the United States. The rules stipulate that the women who join be self-supporting and have health insurance. They renew their vows annually.

In Tijuana, the mention of la Madre Antonia often evokes smiles. A small woman with piercing blue eyes, and a heavy Spanish accent, she befriended inmates at the state-run La Mesa Penitentiary and called them her sons. During a riot in the 1980's, she stepped into the prison courtyard as inmates fired weapons, urging them to stop shooting, said Alberto Licon, a retired Tijuana police commander who witnessed the incident. "The bullets were flying," he recalled. "She went and spoke to them for a long time, and they surrendered."

Mother Antonia fought for the dignity of prisoners of the overcrowded penitentiary, bringing them not just spiritual solace but also physical necessities such as soap, toilet paper, toothpaste and medicines. She raised funds to pay for their dental care, and raised bail for those being held on lesser charges. Her efforts extended to prison guards as well, and outside the penitentiary's walls as she supported cancer and AIDS patients, as well as women newly released from prison and the family members of slain police officers. La Mesa was one of Mexico's most corrupt and overcrowded prisons. When Mother Antonia first persuaded prison officials to let her live there in 1977. Today, the rebuilt penitentiary houses 3,500 inmates, including 440 women, in seven buildings built for 2,500. Many inmates continue to have vast needs, especially those without family members to visit and purchase basic toiletry supplies.

"She's an example for other women," said Sr. Anne Marie. "You can live a full life in one way and then start another life," she said. "This encourages other people to say you know what? If she could do it, I could do it" (www.globalsistersreport.org).

Question: What kind of fruits do I am producing for the Kingdom of God?

Approaching God Together

"Married couples are called to share everything in common - including prayer"

In the article "Approaching God Together" the author David Dawson is trying to explain that marriage is a journey where couples are called to share not only their joys and successes, but also their struggles, fears, and difficulties. He and his wife entered marriage with strong prayer lives and expected that their faith would help them handle whatever challenges came their way. However, as they faced the pressures of raising a family and dealing with their own differences, they began to grow apart rather than closer. They each responded to difficulties in different ways and sometimes became frustrated with one another.

The author eventually realized that he could not simply try to "fix" his wife or expect her to handle things the way he did. Instead, God was calling them to recognize that they were companions who were meant to carry their crosses together. By beginning to pray together openly and regularly, they became more vulnerable with each other and discovered a deeper sense of unity.

The author's main message is that praying together allows married couples to invite God into their relationship, helping them understand one another, face challenges together, and grow stronger in both their marriage and their faith.
